THE FARM.

MANURE ON THE PRAIRIES.

Mr. E. H. Skinner, in an address before the northern Illinois horticultural society, said that, "where I have laid out the most money in cultivation and manuring, I have realized the highest profit on the investment. Let me illustrate this: In the year 1862, I planted 80 rods of land in strawberries, it being my first setting beyond a family support. On this small plot I spent many days, hoeing, cultivating, and raking, making it as fine as a flower garden. All through the season, I really thought myself that it would not pay, but I took great delight in having it look nice. The result was that I had over fifty-three bushels of extra large fruit, and it being a very dry season I realized eight dollars per bushel for it, netting me over three hundred dollars above all labor expended, for the fruit on eighty rods." This experiment induced me to plant four acres next season, and I took the same pains in the setting out and the first sowing, but after that I only gave good ordinary cultivation, and this field looked well; but I could see plainly in the spring following that the yield would not be equal to my first experiment. I am not able to give the exact expense of this four acre, but it was but little, if more than half, than for the first mentioned one-half acre. We picked one hundred and thirty bushels of fruit, the season being quite favorable one. The crop sold for $8 per bushel, making a total of $1,040, or about $800 for the crop net $225 per acre in the last instance, and $600 in the first. Now I would ask, which mode paid the best?

In the above estimate of expenses for the first half acre, I should have mentioned the cost for nine days work with team, hauling and applying water during the draught. Artificial watering of the strawberry or other small fruits, although expensive, will apply to the raspberry and all other small fruits. And if it pays to cultivate thoroughly in growing these fruits for commercial purposes, it pays equally well in growing them for home use.

REPPERTHUR.

A Chicago Tribune letter says of the Reverend Hepworth: "When the reverend gentleman first began to experience a change of heart, he consulted some good old orthodox congregationalists and, upon proselyting intent, promised him that, if he would carry his congregation into their fold, they (the congregationalists) would see that all the debts of the church were paid, and that Mr. Hepworth should be established as pastor of the converted flock, at a largely increased salary. This game came very near being successful, the clear-headedness of one of the trustees alone preventing the pastor getting control, not only of the congregation, but the church property. As it is, the Rev. Mr. Hepworth has no constituency, no church, no salary, little sympathy, and his congregationalist friends have 'gone back on him.'
